From Chamber's Edinburgh Journal. The Bourgeois Wedding.

The Bourgeois Wedding.

A wedding in the middle and humbler classes of society in France is a very different thing from a wedding in England. The double cenemony before the maire and in church takes place early in the morning or in the afternoon. This over, in most cases the whole wedding party adjourn to some celebrated house outside the harrier, where they sit down to dinner about six, to riso about eleven. Then dancing begins, continuing in most cases until six o'elock in the morning—The visitor, then go away to take a little rest, meeting again at dinner time, and dancing once note all night. Sometines there is a third night that in general reasonable people are contented with two; while those who aim at something aftitle above the ordinary run of middle class society, actually stop at one.

Hector Rubinet was an tron monger in a large way of business in the Rue St. Denis, an elector, and, he was proud to say, very nearly digible to the deputation. Young, rich, and tolerable good-hooking, he was the admiration of all the papas and mamas, with marriageable daughters, in the quarter. But, like most of his class, Hector was for some time not at all inclined to yield up his liberty two readily. Not that a French husband enjoys much less liberty when married than before; but the class which has grown ich and powerful since 1759—the citizen or bourgeos class—appears far more under the influence of their wives than the humbler, or more clevated classes. I think this may be easily explained.—The middle classes are in general, thoughgreat grumbles, rich, contented, and happy. They naturally, then, like ease and trangulity, and married men in general seem to agree that submission to getle influence of the fennale head of the family is the surest made of obtaining this desirable state of affairs. I have often remarked myself in this great city, called in France the capital of Europe, that if you want a specimen of thegenes familiarly know as a brate of a husband, you must look for him among the speculative, reckless t or matrimony where, at all events, the wife enters heartly into the counsels of the family, and has at least her proportionate share or influence in its

at least her proportionate state of induction in its government.

Hector Rubinet was, however, of a different opinion. His idea of matrimony was severe.—He wanted a wife who would yield to him in all things, have no will of her own, and never even venture to differ from him in opinion. From twenty to thirty he vainly sought the object of his wishes. He found plenty of young ladies who were as gentle as lambs—who looked models of excellence—whose very tone seemed to promise all he could desire; but Hector was a physiognostic and over found some alturning symptoms. and he could desire; our frector was a physiographic memist, and ever found some alarming symptoms in the fair and youthful aspirants to matrimonial honors around him. One day, however, at a small party given by a stdate manical couple of the Rue Rambuteau, the eye of Hector fell upon a damsel, quite a stranger to him, who drew his attention at once. She was about five-and-twenty, fair, with a white, clear complection, and a tendency to on-horizing, which of itself was promising. Athalio Ports-inque had, morover, a soft, sleepy eye, a foll mouth, a slow, methodical stop, a plain way of wearing her hair. He made inquiries. She had no fortune; she was a poor relation, placed ander the protection of M'me, Dubois, at whose house he met her, and appeared, in fact, the most likely person in the world to be a submissive and aberdient wife.

The wedding was fixed for the very next day. The wedding was fixed for the very next day. Three was the construction in several families, who had made up their minds to Hector not marrying, and looked upon him as a future generous old bachelor, who would make presents to the children, be useful and liberal at weddings, be constant in his distribution of gifts on New Year's day—in fact, who would spend his money in a way satisfactory to the feelings of his friends in general. But now this hope was gone. Hector was going to marry, would have children of his own, a wife to dress, dec. and their visionstanticled. Still all who were invited went to the wedding. It was a splendid affair. Hector had spared no expense with the troustent of his future wife; he had been liberal, even generous; and she looked so quietly beautiful and happy in her white satin dress, wreath of roses, and rich blonde well, that all gave an involuntary meed of praise to his good taste. She had near her a beauty of another kind. This one was about seventeen—a very child in form and expression, and yet exquisitely locally. another kind. This one was about seventeen—a very child in form and expression, and yet exquisitely lovely. Her hair waved, however, in alarming ringlets over her shoulders; her eye, though mild, was fall of latent five; and her beautiful bouth laughingly exposed white and pearly teeth, which made Hector shudder with terror at the base idea of his having selected such a wife. She came with Hector's cousin, Mane. St. Clair, a schoolmistres, who had brought her up from childhood, and who treated her as a visitor rather than a baarder, the young lady being an orphan maler the guardianship of an only brother.

The maniage took place at the parish church,

Hector kubinet said nothing; he recollected that it was his wedding-day, and that at all events he could not renture upon showing authority on such an occasion. Nothing further occurred to mar the happiness of the hour, and six ovicoek soon cameround, with its splendid dinner. It abundant wine, its laughter and merriment, As usual, the banquet was kept up until a late hour, and it was eleven o'clock when the tables were cleared away for the first quadrille.

About an hour later, while the music was soundding merrily, and Hector Rubinet was resting About an hour later, while the masse was sound-ding merrily, and Hector Rubinet was resting after a polka, breathing the fresh air with his wife at the open window, an elegant cab drew up at the door. It contained a young man, and a little grown stool behind. The young man did not get out the appeared simply listening to the music. Hector Rubinet at once recognized him as one of the habitual visitors at Neully Palace—Charles de Monsigny—a favorite companion of

'I am very proud of the honor you do us,' she

'Our 'country-house'' stammered Hector,

Athalic made no reply, quite convinced that it was lucky for her she not had taken the count for her husband: he would not have been so es-ily deceived in her character; or, if he had, would not have yielded. The music again struck up, and M'me Rubinet being engaged, introduced her young friend to Do Monsigny as a partner. The count readily acquiesced, determined to join in the spirit of the affair. He was certainly a little amused at the coolness with which Athalic gave him a mere child to dance with; but he accepted her witha good grace. He was puzzled, however, what to say to so young a girl of the bourgeois class. It was his first attempt, and it made him feel far more hesitation than he would at meeting with one of his own rank under similar circumstances.

"Are you fond of dancing?" said the count in a patronising tone.

"Yes, monsieur, very fond; all girls at my age are; but I never dance with pleasure at a wedding. I know not why—it seems too serious an uffair to be treated so lightly."

"I admire your taste," lepiled the count; who was, however, absolutely petrified at such an observation from a young girl.

"You seem surprised, however, she continued. But I am not in the habit of consulting my own wishes. M'me. St. Clair wished me to come, and I came."

Charles now unhesitatingly opened a serious conversation with his young companion. He spoke of music, the fine arts, peetry, even of politics, and found that on all these topics he had met his master. The young girl had evidently been wholly devoted to study from her infaney, and had profited largely by her reading and thinking. The young man was equally surprisced and pleased; so much so, that for the rest of the evening he devoted himself exclusively to her, and towards morning became so fascinated that in low, whispered tones he made a solemn declaration of love, and said, that could he be tound worthy of such a wife, he would be happy to set aside all his prejudices, and marry. The young girl made him some jocular reply, and then rese, just as the party broke up, to join M'ine. St. Claiv.

She was very pale and thoughtful, he perceived, and his heart smote him. It might be through his inconsiderate conduct the other evening. He pulled in his horses, throw the reins to a sevenut, and hurried towards them. His quick glauce caught that of the young girl, who colored violently, and seemed abut to pass.

"Ah, mademoiselle!" he cried, in a tone of genuine delight, "I am so happy to have had this chance of meeting with you. I did not catch your name the other evening, or I should have called and thanked you for the pleasure I enjoyed in your society."

The young girl smiled, and looked at Madame St. Clair.

"We shall be happy to bee you." said she, handing her card to the Count, "any Thursday evening when you are disengaged."

"I shall avail myself with delight of your kind offer," replied the count. "And now, will you allow me to offer you both a seat in my carriage? I was about to drive to St. Cloud before dinner."

M'me, St. Clair bowed acquiescence, and next minute Charles de Monsigny had the young girl by his side, her eyes sparkling—her whole face beaming with satisfaction. Away they drove, laundreds of fair Indies and numerous horsemen bowing to the court ashe went, and casting cunious eyes on his companions, especially on M'me. St. Clair, who, unfortunately, was a little over-dressed—an unpardonable sin in the eyes of Flench refinement. Once or twice he colored violently as impertinent eye-glasses from well-known fashionables were levelled at her, but the accounting conversation, easily a consider the party of the colored transfer of the colored violently as impertinent eye-glasses from well-known fashionables were levelled at her, but the accounting conversation, easily a consideration of the colored violently as in the colored v the fascinating conversation, sensible remarks, and singular power of observation manifested by his younger companion, soon made him forget everything clee but the pleasure of being in Aboutsix o'clock he left them at their door—they lived in the Rue de Folbourg St. Honore—with a promise to vieit them on the following Thursday. But next Thursday came, and he went not, through his heart told him that he was eagerly expected; that the young gill would be arrayed in her best to greet him, and would saffer disappointment at his failure. But some of his friends had satirised the appearance of his new acquaintance, and he was not proof against the power of smexrus. He indeed felt that on the occasion of his second interview he had been ay more seriously influenced by her charms than before, but still he could not reconcile his mind to the fact of marying into a class which was not his own. Yet he both felt that his affections were engaged, and that he had behaved badly to the poor gall. His attention had been so marked, and had been received with such evident pleasure, that this was quite plain. He planged once more into the turnoil of the world—played, danced, joined champagne suppers, and did everything which could banish thought and deaden feeling. All 'was in vain; but though he could not resist, he had no 'intention of surrendering. He thought of travel, and one morraing rose early with a view to making the necessary preparations. He sat at breakfast in deep thought: at length he took up his pen, and hastily dashed off a letter, which he sent to he put in the post by one of his servants.

This done, he seemed easier in his mind. But still then was an air of restless impantience about him, as if he expected some one or something. At last he took a book, called for a Turkish hookah, and sat down to try and calm himself with reading and smoking. Again it proved avain attempt; when, just as his batience was at an end, a servant entered and amounced a visitor—Captain Edgar Scuincourt-War, ille, a young noble who had sought distinction in Africa in th

"Ab, Edgar, my good friend," said he rising, "you come in the very nick of time. I was as dull as a mummy. But what is the matter?— You look more like an angry lion than a goodna-tured friend who has called in to pass a friendly hour."

"Monsieur, I come here on grave and solemn business. I come to ask an account of the life and honour of my only sister Adela de Senincourt-Warville."

'You could have obtained both from M. Rubinet,' continued the captain severely;' but I has that. You met them; you ran to meet them; made excuses for your apparent neglect; took them; a drive; talked for three bours to my sister, and at parting said; "I shall ask you next Thursday to decide the happiness of my ife."

'She told you that? said Charles musing.
'She told me nothing. When the evening passed without your coming, the poor child, werecome by disappointment, wounded pride and grief, told it in a passionate burst of teams to Mme, St. Clair, who repeated it all to me, when I walled for an availablation of her pallor and I asked for an explanation of her pallor and lowness of spirits. And now, monsieur, that I have told you of my sister's weakness, there remains but for me to put it out of your power for ever to oast of your facile conquest.'
'I boast" cried Charles indignantly.
'You allowed others to talk to you in a way

'Must I call you coward? said Edgar, 'tamping his feet on the floor of the room.
'This passes the bounds,' exclaimed the count in reply. 'To-morrow morning at break of day our seconds will arrange the details. Goodafter-noon until we say good-norning, replie! the angry captain, and he left the room.
Charles de Monsigny was now in a violent passion. The word coward had roused him to madners, and he thought only of avenging the insult by committing one of the greatest-crimes of which a reasoning being can be guilty. He, however, soon grew calm, went out to dinner, looked in at the Opera, and then, requesting his second to be with him at dawn of day, returned home, and retired to bed.

If was a bright clear more ug, the sun had ust risen, the birds saug amid the trees of the Boildone, as Charles and his second lrove up to the rendezvous. Presently all was ready, by a great effort Chailes forced himself to speak. 'Gentlemen,' said he gravely, 'I beg you to bear whites to the fact, that I fight this duel with M. 'Sir, to your place! neplied Edgar furiously;

'And mine!' cried Adela, advancing from the cover of the wood, and laying her hand upon her brother's arm, 'if I have not come in time to prevent assasination.'
'Leave us, I command you!' said Edgar.'
'No, I will not, until you have pledged yourself not to take the life of my future husband.'
'Your future husband!' said Edgar wildly.
Yes, monsieur, you force me, by your fierce and savage humor, to accept him thus hurriedly, replied Adela blushing, but still looking him calmly in the face; 'that is to say, if you, my natural guadian, approve of this request made for the hand of the patite bourgeoise.'

'MADAME—I have to apologise very humbly for my unpolite behavior towards yourself and your charming ward. On two occasions, when I had the honor of seeing you, I expressed a wish that we should meet again, and, after receiving permission, did not avail myself of it. It is not possible now for me to reck to renew the acquaintance without some explanation I finally own, that having been very much struck on the first occasion by your ward, and on the second having conceived for her a wann and sincere affection, I have from mere pride contended against the feeling as long as I could. To many into the bangeois is in my family considered an unpardonable crine, and it is on account of this prejudice that I have acted with such want of delicacy. But I am sure your young ward is as good and generous as she is beautiful and I rely fully on her forgiving one who seeks his pandon in a penitent spirit, and young girl made him some jocular reply, and then rese, just as the party broke up, to join M'me. Next day Charles had not forgotten the passion of the previous evening; but he no longer felt under the influence of the feelings which had made him speak so plainly. He certainly recollected all her many perfections of person and character, and thought that had she beent one of his own class he would certainly have been tempted to follow up the acquaintance so auspiciously commenced. But she was a little lourgeoist and he did not even know her name. He therefore resolved to think no more of her, but to make up his mind to the fact, that he had spent a very pleasant ovening, quite sure that to would forget. 'That project I betrayed, said Mome, St. Clair, who had reached the side of Adela while Edgar was reading the letter. 'With pleasure,' replied Edgar, laughing; 'and

'My dear bother-in-law,' cried Charles in the

The count defended himself as besthe could, and thus the conversation continued during the whole morning.

The marriage took place within a day of the delay required by the legal formalities. M. and M'me. Hector Rubinet were among the guests invited to the wedding-breakfast. Both then and ever after the contrast between the couples was marked. Hector sunk from the day of his marriage into a complete nonentity. His wife ruled him without his ever venturing a nummu, and he found his advantage in it. Having it in her own hands, she took care of his fortune, and spent money freely, but wasted nothing. Hector tried once or twice to launch into speculations, but his wife stopped him, and his children reaped the benefit. First, for "correcting the Journal." The bil petitioned against by citizens of Portage Co., is No. 120 Assembly, and not 112, as the telegraph has it. So also a certain petition mentioned is for the relief of mutes, not mutes—the last highly in-tere-ting class of animals being here in full forces and able to take care of themselves. There was a good joke yesterday in Senate, which will be enjoyed by no one with better humor than by him who was at once its perpetrate and victim. Mr. Cosgrove, a worthy Irishman and efficient officer, who is Sergeant-at-Arms of the Scoate, was the man. There was a call of the Senate. The Sorgeant went out to hant up the delinquents. During the pendency of the first order of Josi ness this morning, a set of resolutions were read, passed at a public meeting at Port Winnebago, in Assembly generally for not passing it, and "seting up" Mr. Lewis, who introduced the bill, "as steep as the side of a bain."

The Report of the Select Committee on the improvement is meeting with a great deal of comnent, not likely to be decreased when it is seen n print. With regard to the lettings beyond the atimates, and sundry matters mentioned ye -terday. encerning which the Committee did not report m opinion, not having given them any examination in the brief time occupied therein, Mr. Peak stated this morning that the increase to contractors beyond the estimates, and beyond the first lettings was caused by the increased size of the canal and locks, after the lettings and by the Commissioners, The Dr. stated this, as if it should be a full answer to all objections. There are many who doubt the right to in the such new arrangements, increasing the size of the work one half. A move was made to take up the resolution to go into the election of officers of the Board on Tuc-day. It elicited a warm debate. Several gentlemen avowed their dissatisfaction with the idea of going into the election before they had had an opportunity to examine the Report in print. The House finally refused to suspend the

A committee was appointed this morning to look into a cognate matter, and may possibly have comething more to say on the subject.

The work done was only to decide in favor of requiring bonds of Directors of banks to the amount of one fourth of their circulating motes, as an additional security for billholders. The remaining time was occupied in discussing different amounts proposed for filling the first blank in the 13th section.

There was an evening session, the anti-capita punishment bill being the special order, but se much time occupied in a call of the House, owing to many of the members being absent, and widescattered, that I have no time to allude to the debate in this letter W. H. W.

Advice to Passengers.—We have conversed with sery many of the passengers now here, and assertin that the amount of funds calculated upon by them to defray their expenses to San Frances, cell far below the actual cost. They say that the general impression of their own communities is defective in the same way. Once more, then, we would say, that no man desiring to go to California, should have one cent less than $250 after arriving at Charges, even for travelling in the cheipest style. Parties should have just as much in proportion for each individual member. Those who have it to bring should not come with less than $200, and those who have not $250, had much better stay at home, whatever their situation be.—From the Panama Echo.

A Tragedy Prevented.—It appears that Grunzig, who was executed on Friday, had devised a plot to munder his mistress. Margaretta Lohrens, who is confined in the City Prison, charged with being the accomplice in the murder of Grunzig's wife, for which he has paid the penalty. Carnel, the Day street murderer, who occupied the cell next to his, was let into the secret and exposed it, and thus, no doubt, prevented the perpetration of a bloody tragedy. Grunzig had made a dinner knife sharp at the point and edge, which he gave in Carnel's charge, lest his cell might be examined, and he intended, it seems, at the private interview with Margaretta, which he expected would be granted him before his death, to kill her, and then stab himself. Grunzig dispatched a letter on Thursday last to the District Attorney, asking permission to have an interview with Margaretta, which was granted but not allowed to be private. Carnel, in the meantime, wrote a letter to Mr. Verren, one of Grunzig's spiritual advisers, and hinted to him that something was wrong, and at a subsequent interview produced the knile.

Margaretta gave birth to a female child on Satuday morning.

The funeral of Grunzig took place yesterday; the services took place in the Rev. Dr. Verren's church, after which the body was conveyed to Greenwood Cemetery. There was a a large assemblage of Germans on the occasion.—New York: Mirror.

The wedding was fixed for the very next day.

Inder the guardianship of an only brother. The marriage took place at the parish church, and then the whole party adjourned to a celebrated restaurant outside the Barriere de l'Etoile, as the Avenue de Neuilly. Dinner had been ordered, for six o'clock, and in the mean time the party wandered in the fields behind the house, each lady taking the arm o'a gentleman. Hector proposed a walk as far as the Bois de Boulo-he, in a whispen, 'every thing I could wish-knows no will but mine, and will scarcely speak unless I give her tacit leave.'

'You are very happy, my dear Hector,' continued Charles in a tone of half-affection, half-scream; 'that is to say, if one can ever call a married man happy.'

'Ah, M. le Count, your turn will come!'

'Mine! Never! I could not take the trouble. I congratulate you on your courage, but must beg to decline following in your footsteps.'

'I highly approve madame's taste,' said Charles, gravely, 'and shall be most happy to visit you in your rural retreat. I like to see conjugal happiness, though not a marrying-man myself.'

Hector made no reply: he was completely overcome. He secretly yielded to despair—There was in his heart no power of reisting the quiet, positive way of his young wife. The dancing at this moment cassed, and Athalic, taking the count's arm, moved to walk round the room. As she did so she caught a meaning looked exchanged between the friends,

'Our Hector is a happy man,' said the count, politely, as they advanced round the sadon.

'Do you think so?' replied Athalic, silly.

'Certainly. He evidently thought he had married a fool, and he finds that ho has married his master,' said Charles, who had all the cool impudence of his class—that of Frenchmen of the world.

We reached Nice, (which is truly a nice town) at 10 o'clock in the evening. I intended to say something of Nice in this letter, but at American gentlemon, (Mr. Coster, of New York,) has asked me to dinner, and as that you know, is a "privileged question," other business must wait m "privileged question," other business must wait.

Nice, Jan. 20, 1852.—With snow upon the mountains in full view, you have green peas here for dinner. The town is surrounded and sheltered, on three sides, by mountains, while in front it looks out pleasantly upon the Mediterranean. The atmosphere is at once mild and bracing. In the new town and over the environs, are large and pleasant mansions occupied by families who come here to pass the winter.—Rents are moderate and provisions reasonable, so that you may consult both health and economy. It is a favorite resort of the English, of whom large numbers are seen on the Promendes and in their carriages. I met them also at the "Circle," an English reading room, discussing Lord John Russell, de., as carneatly as if the whole responsibility of Government was resting upon each one of them.

The ancient town of Nice was built upon a high rock which was strongly fortified, but which is now laid out in terraces and grottoes, from which you look upon the town, away to the mountains, and again over the sea to the Island of Corsica.

I supposed that we had seen marrow streets in Corsica.

I supposed that we had seen marrow streets in Rouen, Toulon, &c., but they were only narrow as compared with the narrowest part of Maiden Lane. In the older parts of Nice there are long streets, with building, six and soven stories high. not five feet wide.
The beach and the surf all along in front of Nice is as fine for bathing as that at Rockaway or Newport.
At our banker's this morning I met a lady who

At our banker's this morning I met a lady who recognized me as an American and introduced herself as "Madame Jumel, better known in America," she added, as "Madame Burn, though I have resurned the name of my former husband." This lady, though eighty years eld, has all the vivacity of youth. She is on her way to Rome, from whence she is to "return to Paris, take a few lessons in dancing and re-appear at Saratoga in all any glory." She sand that she had crossed the Atlantic mine times; and learning that I came out in the Baltic, inquired if Capt. Constock did noe tell me that she was the best tempered and least troublesome lady passenger he had ever had.

I dined agreeably with Mr. Coster. of New York, who, with his brother-in-law, Mr. Reubell, has passed three winters at Nice. Mr. Reubell, has passed three winters at Nice. Mr. Reubell, whose grand father was in the French Directory in 1753, and whose father was a General in the army of France-himself a highly intelligent gentleman-gave me much information which may not be written. His father and Jerome Bonaparte were young officers at the Island of Gaudaloupe when the French lost that Island; both escaped in an American vessel, and both married American ladies at Baltimore. While Bonaparto was King of Westphalio, Gen Reubell was his aid-de-camp. The son, who married Miss Coster, is so much dissatisfied with France. in proving recreant to Republicanism, that he is going to America to become a citizen.

By the present, Lattest my entire satisfaction with the prospect of my house, covered with the presset, sire-proof Tite, invented by Mr. Graessle; having found them perfectly secure during snow-storms, rains, wind and intine cold. I hereby take occasion to recommend said root covering to every house-builder, inviting them to satisfy themselves by occular inspection of the excellent quality of the same.

Milwaukee, Feb. 3, 1552.

The above I found true in every respect, as to the roof of my house, covered with the same tile, invented by Mr. Graessle.

Brewer, Chestnut-st., 2nd ward. Graessie.

Brewer, Chestina St., 2nd ward.

The undersigned, having carefully examined the pressed rooting Tiles, intented by Mr. Graessie, have found them perfectly answering the purpose intended. Their practical and sagacious construction recommend this kind of Tile, not only as a fire-proof and perfectly water-proof covering, but above all for its durability. The ridges and channels not only exclude the entering of snow or rain-water, but, by their tirm and precise joining of now for rain-water, but, by their tirm and precise joining of now for rain-water, but, by their tirm and precise joining of now for rain-water, but, by their tirm and precise joining of now for the other, they give every or rain-wate, position and an intinace connection. Easilies this, Mr. Graessie's method of luming the Tiles, despices them of the injurious tendency to absorb unter, making them in this way durable; and joining to the above a nother virtue, viz. that of dispensing with repairs. The undersigned therefore consider ourselves fully justified in recommending to the building community the above nother virtue, viz. that of dispensing with repairs. We would respectfully call the attention of our many friends, and the public generally, to an instrument we have recently imported from Paris, "Conformateur." "Conformateur."

from which the above cut was taken. By it we can take the exact shape, and unoringly fit the most irregular heads. Many can testify to the inconvenience, and annovance, and actual pain they are subjected to, in breaking in Hats that will not fit them. By this ingenious contrivance, this very great annoyance is done away; as the Hats are made to it perfectly the first time.

Another great davantage is, by keeping a copy of the impression, we can at all times fit our customers from all parts of the country.

We invite all who desire a perfect fit in a Hat, to call and leave an impression of their head; and all those who take pleasure in witnessing the inventions of this curious instrument.

Having adopted 'the Cass System (which all will readily acknowledge to be the best,) we are enabled to sell the best Silk Hat made, at the extreme low price of $4.25 : surpassing any $5 Hat sold in this city. Our Hats are all manufactured by ourselves, and in offering them to our customers, we do so, with the conlident assurance, they are all we recommend them to be, we invite all who do not wish to pay two profits upon a Hat, and are willing to save 25 per cent, to call and see us.
